Effective communication is the lifeblood of a company. It starts at the top and builds momentum as it touches people throughout the organization. It is particularly crucial during periods of high growth or major change. Sherry works with companies to help ensure effective communications strategy and implementation at any stage of growth or change.

She specializes in helping executives communicate clearly, consistently, and sincerely – and understand the profound effects their communication has on their organizations. She designs and implements solutions that stabilize productivity, increase retention, raise employee morale, and foster customer loyalty. Results have taken the pressure off many an executive determined to meet this quarter's numbers.

Her internal communications work also encompasses communications and performance skills coaching and peer mentor training.

In addition to her work in internal communications, Sherry has directed successful marketing teams for several companies, introducing product lines and earning credit for significantly increasing sales while remaining under budget. She has headed teams that produced widely recognized brands within their industries.

Her marketing/PR consulting experience has focused on financial services and high tech industries. She has written diverse marketing and PR collateral as well as Web sites, business plans, articles, radio spots, and speeches for clients such as IBM, StorageTek, and MasterCard.
